Nestled beneath the red rocks of Southwest Utah, Ivins City is about more than streets, neighborhoods, and city government. Ivins City has a unique identity and image which reflects a relaxed quality of life. Seeking inspiration from the beautiful natural surroundings and peaceful spirit; artists, art organizations and art enthusiasts are drawn to Ivins City. With this in mind, Ivins City has adopted an Arts Master Plan and established an Arts Commission to foster and grow Public Art in Ivins.

What is the Arts Commission

The Ivins City Arts Commission was established by the City Council to assist in the implement of the Arts Master Plan. This seven-member body appointed by the Mayor, with the consent of the City Council, advises on:

- Implementation of the Arts Master Plan
- Appointment of Arts Commission Members
- Publicity for community arts events
- Award of arts grants
- Funds available for Public Art
- Revision of the Art Master Plan

What is Public Art

Here in Ivins, we have chosen to broadly define Public Art. Our community actively promotes art in public places such as sculptures in parks, round-a-bouts and public buildings. We also consider community events such as concerts, plays, performances and festivals, fully or partially supported with public funds, to fit neatly into this broad definition of Public Art.

Why Public Art

When art, whether visual or performing, is readily available and accessible to the public, the community as a whole benefits. Living Artfully offers a host of benefits to the community:

- Active engagement in civic dialogue and community
- Economic benefit and attraction to Ivins City
- Connecting artists with their community
- Enhanced appreciation of art
- Enjoyment by citizens and visitors alike

Where is Public Art?

Public art exists throughout Ivins City in many forms:

- Live performances at Tuacahn Amphitheatre,