Five years ago I had never heard of Ivins, Utah. I was familiar with St. George, but not the surrounding towns. We had lived in the Sugar House area of Salt Lake City for thirteen years, and I planned to stay there until I went to a nursing home or a cemetery. I loved it because it reminded me of the New York town in which I grew up with its mature trees lining the streets.

Then we visited our former neighbors who had recently moved to Ivins. I completely and instantly fell in love with this area. I love the red rocks, of course, but I also love the tranquility and peace that is here. Although I realize that this will eventually change, I love that I can hear the coyotes and smell the cattle and newly cut hay. I love its proximity to St. George for the amenities of a larger city. I've lived all over the country, but have never driven on a road that is such a visual feast as Snow Canyon Parkway. When I have to go to St. George it isn't a negative because the drive is so beautiful. My husband and I enjoy a daily bike ride through Kayenta and Ivins and it never gets old. We have purchased cemetery lots here and plan to never leave.

Because of the joy this area has brought to me in the last four and a half years, I feel a desire to pay back, to return the favor that has been done to me in finding this gem here in southern Utah. I believe that too often I have taken for granted the good things of life. As I watch the world lately, I feel the need to put forth some effort to preserve what I have enjoyed and continue to enjoy.

I have talked with many people from literally all over the country who feel that they were led to this area. They, like me, feel blessed to be here. I want to help to preserve this area so that people will continue to feel that blessing.
